Plans for the first spaceport are close to finalization

By the 2020s, NASA and other ISS partners are planning to begin construction on an orbiting lunar outpost.

By Alison Klesman | Published: Friday, March 10, 2017

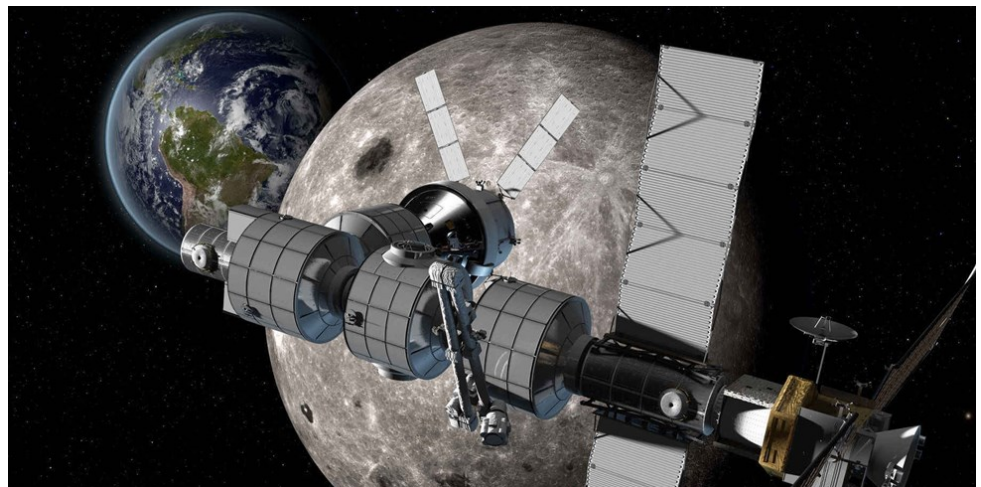

The International Space Station

NASA's goal of sending humans to Mars by the 2030s faces many challenges. Now, if all goes well, the American space agency is poised to take one of the first steps toward overcoming those challenges. Although the project is still speculative, NASA and other International Space Station (ISS) partners have begun making plans for a cis-lunar "spaceport" designed to provide a stepping-stone to the Red Planet.

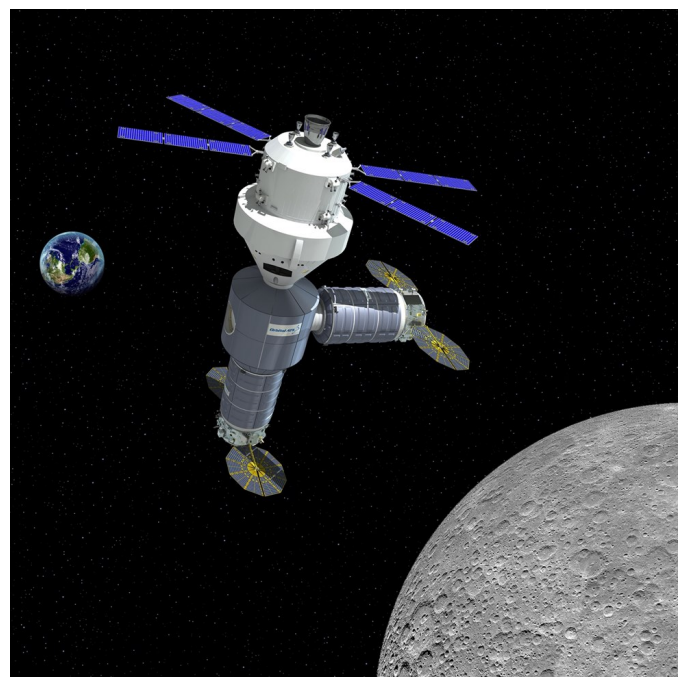

Last month, representatives from five of the world's space agencies met in Tsukuba, Japan, to discuss their plans for a space station orbiting the Moon. Finalization of the station's design could come as early as next year. In the ensuing months, these space agencies will begin reviewing plans for a potential cis-lunar station that would serve as proof of concept for many of the challenges that manned missions to asteroids and Mars would pose. Such challenges include the development of deep space life support systems and the integration of human and robotic science and space-flight operations.

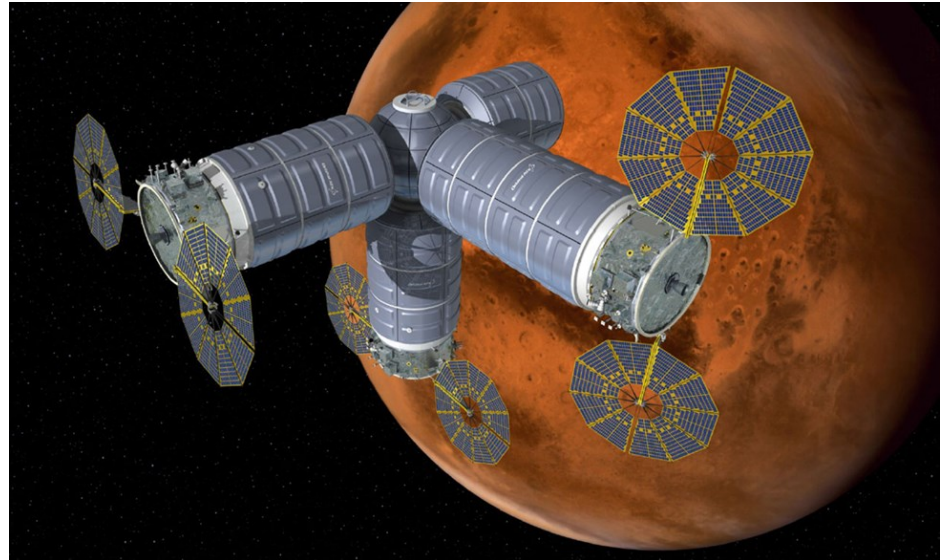

Concept Station

Concept Station

Cis-lunar space is simply the volume of space enclosed by a sphere with a diameter equivalent to the Moon's orbit. Proving that closed-system, long-term human habitation is manageable here is a necessity before longer missions are planned at distances that don't allow for easy rescue or re-supply. During the meeting in Tsukuba, the ISS partners agreed upon a Near-Rectilinear Halo Orbit, or NRHO, for the station, which would be an oval-shaped loop that would bring the station as close to the Moon as 900 miles (1,500km) and take it out to 43,000 miles (70,000km) throughout a single orbit.

There are several advantages of such an orbit, including minimal need for fuel to correct course, consistent communication with Earth and direct sunlight on the station's solar panels, and ease of access (and egress) for NASA's Orion spacecraft. Such an orbit is not ideal, however, for exploration of the lunar surface. Russia's Roscosmos State Corporation for Space Activities, which would prefer the station be used primarily for lunar exploration, is still evaluating the feasibility of a lower lunar orbit, despite the agreement on an initial NRHO.

This is just one example of the potential for conflict that such a project can create, even among partners. Determining the exact science and technology goals of such an undertaking and leaving room for future contributors is difficult, and may require additional adaptability in the station's design. To satisfy the goals of both lunar exploration and future missions to Mars, for example, NASA is currently considering whether the station could be built to split into two, keeping some parts permanently circling the Moon, while others would be detachable for future missions.

Other considerations include developing common standards that will be used by all partners contributing to the station. The ultimate goal is to enact “plug and play” designs that allow new devices and modules to fit into the existing infrastructure seamlessly and pave the way for potential new partners in the future. Currently, the station’s agreed-upon design incorporates a U.S.-made power and propulsion module, European- and Japanese-built habitation modules, a Russian-constructed airlock, and Canada’s famous robotic arm. A 360-degree viewing module is also under consideration, taking a page from the ISS’ book to recreate the design of the existing cupola module.

The station’s components will be delivered to space via NASA’s Space Launch System rocket, although Russia is currently evaluating the ability of its Angara-5 rocket to deliver its airlock module when ready. Cargo and crew could be delivered annually via NASA Orion spacecraft, but the door is open for industrial contractors to potentially take over this role as well, in the same manner that the ISS receives cargo from SpaceX and Orbital ATK flights today. Ultimately, the station’s goal will be to incorporate a completely “closed-loop” life-support system that recycles all of the station’s necessities without the need for resupply.

Currently, plans call for the station’s construction throughout much of the 2020s, with use as a deep space launching platform in the 2030s. Although several uncertainties still exist, including the current White House’s goals for American spaceflight, the first logistics flight for the cis-lunar outpost could take place as early as 2024.

We are now coming down the stretch for Summit. By the time this is posted Summit will be a scant few days away. Are you ready for the conference? Have you volunteered to help? We can use your assistance, believe me, even if to help only on the day of the con and not to prepare anything. Join now for citizenship. (Starship Troopers reference)

From the center seat life on board seems to be going smoothly for the most part from within our starship.

Summit is on schedule and appears to be ready to go. Khane is on top of this as it is her bid. This Summit was the make or break on the idea that the hotels are too expensive. We have a non-hotel venue and you may stay where you wish without penalty of missing a single thing.

The venue is next door to a bowling alley and a movie theater. We have a Country show lined up that evening. Its ala carte in its set up so you may opt out of paying for what you do not want. It is perfect for the previous nay sayers.

The picnic location is locked down and your CO is setting up for the BBQ portion of this function. Do we need a theme or a plan? Do we need games or just great conversation? Help us out with ideas.

And, the new website is holding up and getting updates. For a while it was touch and go.

This just in... Horizonite Phillip Allen has just had emergency surgery. He is doing well and recovering.

Our chapter seems to have peaked. I have solicited input from many of our members on what activities we need to focus on and what you are interested in. Please contact me by any means if you have a suggestion or idea. We need to get out and do some new things once in a while, but those suggesting ideas in the past may have missed that great one you have. Give it a shout out! Also, please look at the calendar well ahead and let us know if there is a problem with an entry. It is very hard to change it once we are within a month or two. Plans are made, days are requested off, and some are looking forward to a bad idea.

Just remember that we have multiple calendars including the email/text method. Check us out all over the place.

Fancy that. I had a most fantastic birthday month, ending in a fancy dinner. The best part about birthdays is, of course, the birthday cake. Ok, the gifts are nice, too. The Sunday before my birthday, my group of ladies from work and their husbands joined Eddie and I at Hobo's in St Peters. It was unanimous, everyone loved the food! One of my key holders brought an Oreo cake, and that was the beginning of my birthday celebrations. My goody bag had lots of girlie goodies. Nail polish, a candle, hot pink jeweled lanyard, Cracker Barrel gift card, among other things.

The day before my birthday, we enjoyed s'mores cupcakes, yum.

On the day of my birthday, Eddie and I did our normal PF Chang's before we headed off to see Logan. I think that movie is one of ones you either liked it or you didn't. It's quite violent, and left me a little disappointed. I also had the most delicious chocolate birthday cake with chocolate frosting. Eddie ordered it up from Heaven Scent Bakery. This place has a 24-hour drive-thru so you don't have to worry about getting your donut fix.

To round out the birthday celebrations, instead of going out to dinner, my friend opted to invite me over for "Fancy Dinner night", her daughter's idea. I've never been to a Fancy Dinner thrown by a 3rd grader, I worried that I might not come in dress code. I finally settled on a pair of black straight leg pants with a black handkerchief top with silver sequined neckline.

Since we are in full blown lent, and I gave up meat for lent, I had to pass on the filet mignon that was on the menu, but not to worry, there was also shrimp scampi, and mussels in wine, asparagus, baked potatoes, and lots of wine. For dessert, we had the most decadent homemade chocolate cupcakes with raspberry cream in the center, and a chocolate ganache on top. Another goodie bag. Oh My!!!

I've been so busy with celebrating my birthday, that it just dawned on me that, actually, I'm a little older. Funny how these things sneak up on you.

It's a good thing that I'm keeping up with my exercising, I can't let all of those birthday treats stick to me for long.

I am in the throws of planning for the Kingdom Summit and yet not knowing rather or not to continue. At this point there are only 13 registrations and 7 of those are Horizon members. Chris and I have talked about cancelling the summit but then those that have decided to come would be disappointed and all of our work and planning would be for naught.

It has been decided that we shall move forward and who comes is who will have the best time and once the information for the summit is published others will be sad they did not attend. This is our chance to meet and greet other members of the region and show them a good time the Horizon way.

Horizon members tried to meet at the Upper Crust but their kitchen closed at 2:00 so we went around the corner to one of the XO's favorite places 44 Stone Public House. In attendance was Eddie, Lee, Cindy, Linda and Connie. Linda left early due to not feeling well. Caverly was not in attendance for the second month in a row so a resolution was made to give her a call to check up on her.

The above items were discussed and also more plans for the summit. Eddie has put his video crew together, Little Jeff and Tony Favron. The reset is coming together.

We went for ice cream at Freddie's and were joined by Edward Kate and Wylie. Kate is expecting in August and so is member MySha. YEAH.
