Breaking up is hard to do: Africa could eventually split into two continents

Experts say Africa will be split into two different continents in the future. A massive crack appeared in the East African Rift Valley of Kenya. Buzz60

It'll take tens of millions of years, but Africa may eventually split into two parts.

While geologists have known about this possibility for a while, it became news recently when a large crack, stretching several miles in length, made a sudden appearance in southwestern Kenya following heavy rain.

The tear, which continues to grow, collapsed part of a highway and "was accompanied by seismic activity in the area," said Lucia Perez Diaz, a postdoctoral researcher on tectonics at Royal Holloway, a university in London.

The crack is located in a region known as the East African Rift Valley. It measures more than 50 feet in depth and 65 feet across, according to National Geographic. A rift valley refers to a lowland region where tectonic plates rift, or move apart.

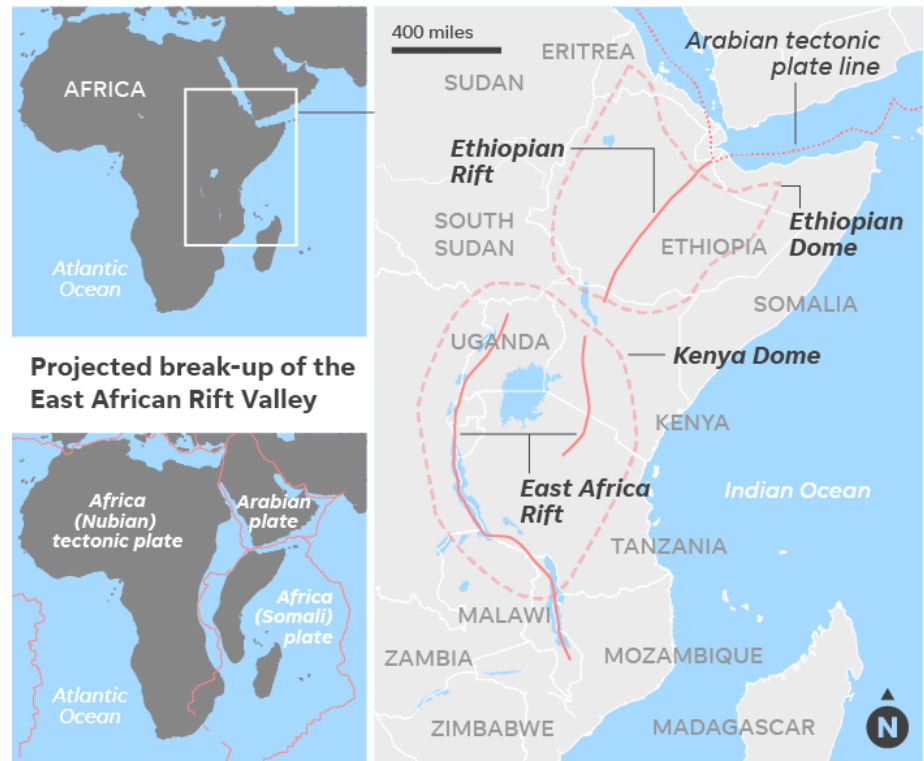

The valley stretches over 1,800 miles from the Gulf of Aden in the north towards Zimbabwe in the south, splitting the African plate into two unequal parts: the smaller Somali plate and much larger Nubian plate, Perez Diaz noted.

Eventually the rift should expand and break Africa into two continents: The smaller continent will include present-day Somalia and parts of Kenya, Ethiopia, and Tanzania, while the bigger one will include everything else.

"A rift like this once eventually separated the African and South American continents to form the Atlantic Ocean, and the rift in east Africa may be the very early stages of this," said Christy Till, an Arizona State University geologist. "The process just occurs very slowly and takes millions of years."

The East African Rift System

SOURCE NASA; geology.com

In the U.S., the southwest is sliced by the Rio Grande Rift Valley, which stretches from Chihuahua, Mexico, to Colorado, according to National Geographic. Its formation, roughly 30 million years ago, is responsible for the Rio Grande River bordering the southern U.S.

"Dramatic events, such as sudden motorway-splitting faults or large catastrophic earthquakes may give continental rifting a sense of urgency but, most of the time, it goes about splitting Africa without anybody even noticing," Perez Diaz said.

Lately we have been doing movie days in St Louis. This started in November. We are also doing game days which started in October. These are wildly successful and will continue. Finally, there are now bowling days. It has brought more of our members into the active fold and others are joining just for an opportunity to get into activities with other like-minded Science Fiction aficionados. I would like to welcome new members Staci Barnes, Patricia Foley and Rodney Boyd. Our membership is now over 80 and climbing. Thanks to all those who have recruited for us throughout the last year.

I have had to put sleep on hold this last month. Between OCP work (mostly counting coupons) and activities I am only averaging 6.5 hours a night and have pretty much quit looking at Facebook in the evenings. Now you know why I have not been around in that venue. It's a good thing the Olympics were on television this month as it allowed me to catch up on all my shows except the Fab Four which have been behind for over a year. I can watch the Olympics and cut or sort coupons with the best of them. This year we won 23 medals with 9 gold.

Many are disappointed as we have not had a total this low in 20 years. Note: 2014=28, 2010=37, 2006=25 etc. But, many don't really understand that we train most of the world's athletes here in the good old US of A. They compete here and take spots on our teams and in the various world competitions, they take medals for their own country. That is the way it is. It is too late now but we should have had an Olympics party for the opening ceremony. Next Olympics that is doable.

And, back on the subject of game and movie days, I have tried to have these in Columbia. There was a time when they were very popular. No one really comes out for them. I will gladly join in on a movie day or game day in Columbia anytime if scheduled enough in advance for me to add it to my calendar and make it. That is usually about 1.5 to 2 months out. I am in Trek & Sci Fi to have fun. I am not here to simply do work or run a chapter. That is the last part of what I do. So... Let's get together more often for "FUN!"

The game day on February 24th in Columbia did not go over very well. I am open to suggestions. It is time to refresh the calendar and I would really like to place items in there that the group would enjoy. Call me or text me. Email me. Any way you wish please let me know what you consider fun.

I have had Wiley several times over the last month. We have now discovered the wonderful world of car racing. He is the master blaster for this event and will sit for quite a while playing with his cars and track. I never had such fun toys at the age of three. Wow!! For those who wish to hang out with the Wiley monster, he will be at the Reunion in March.

Well that is all I have for now. Keep Trekkin'

'Star Trek: Discovery' Bosses Break Down Season Finale's 'Exciting' Final Reveal (Exclusive)

By Philiana Ng 6:30 PM PST, February 11, 2018

Warning: Spoiler alert! Do not proceed if you have not watched the finale of Star Trek: Discovery. Everyone else, you may continue...

Was that what we thought it was?

In the final moments of Sunday's season finale of Star Trek: Discovery, titled "Will You Take My Hand?," Michael Burnham (Sonequa Martin-Green) and the USS Discovery crew -- after they successfully ended the war with the Klingons -- received a distress signal just as they were on their way to Vulcan to pick up their new captain. But the distress call wasn't just from any starship -- it came from decorated Starfleet Captain Christopher Pike of the USS Enterprise, the same starship Captain James T. Kirk would lead in just a little under a decade.

After realization hit the Discovery crew that it was the Enterprise seeking help, the iconic NC-1701 starship came into full view in front of the USS Discovery for a thrilling ending that will leave fans talking. ET jumped on the phone with Star Trek: Discovery showrunners Gretchen J. Berg and Aaron Harberts, who are already hard at work planning the sophomore season, to discuss the exciting finale reveal, what it means for season two and if this is goodbye for Jason Isaacs and Michelle Yeoh.

ET: Why did you want to introduce the USS Enterprise now on Star Trek: Discovery?

Gretchen J. Berg: From the beginning, it was something that we knew that folks who are fans of Star Trek know the Enterprise is out there and it was kind of the elephant in the room. We knew eventually that we would want to address that and deal with it. Even though it's a giant, giant universe, it's something that's on everybody's minds. So we were glad to be able to take the whole season to get to know our crew because the storytelling is going to be told from the point of view from Michael Burnham and Discovery. Let everybody get to know our characters and our show and what we were doing before we brought in the Enterprise. We knew it would be exciting and provocative, for sure.

Aaron Harberts: We also knew that we couldn't hold off on this because there are so many questions about Burnham in regards to the notion of Sarek and Spock's family, which is not to say that we're introducing Spock at the moment. We don't want to spoil anything. But it's certainly time to get the audience understanding that we fully intend to respect the original series and respect where Discovery falls in that. To do that, we have to show the Enterprise and at least have these ships cross paths.

What is your intention with establishing the Enterprise in this way? What are you comfortable saying with regards to its place in season two?

Berg: Usually, we like to say sit back and enjoy the ride because it's one of those things... You know, as a writer, you work on something and work on something, and you're always like, but wait! We're working on it and we're going to show it to you and you'll see. We're certainly acknowledging that they exist in the same time. But always, always, always, the story on Discovery will be told from the point of view of Disco and our Disco crew. I think it's fair to expect something, but we probably couldn't go too much into detail about what it is.

Engineers log

Harberts: More than anything, it is about what new stories does this provide for our crew, for Michael Burnham, for Saru, for Tilly. Our main interest is Discovery. However, if the presence of the Enterprise can show us new things about our crew, the better. It's notable that it's Captain Pike who sent the distress signal for the Enterprise. Is he a character we could meet in season two, along with Enterprise crew members?

Harberts: The thing to consider about Captain Pike is, from an audience and writer's point of view, there is something very exciting about a key character from [Star Trek: The Original Series] who's only been explored in two episodes of the original series -- three if you consider how [the rejected pilot for the original series] "The Cage" works into the puzzle in TOS. When we think about the idea of Captain Pike, it opens up some large possibilities. We will never say never to exploring him a little bit more.

Before they received the distress call, they were on their way to Vulcan to pick up the new captain for the USS Discovery. What can you divulge about that piece of intel? Is it something fans should keep in the back of their mind?

Harberts: This is a story about detours...

The Mirror Universe really allowed us to see Discovery characters in new lights, from Gabriel Lorca to Philippa Georgiou. Will you be revisiting the Mirror Universe again in the new season or has that chapter closed?

Berg: The Mirror Universe was perfect for season one because one of the themes of the season was literally self-discovery for Michael Burnham, figuring out who she was. The great thing about going to Mirror was to be able to live out the fantasy of "If we did this, should've, could've, would've," and "If I had an opportunity to say goodbye to somebody again or have closure with somebody again," and it fit perfectly with that theme. In order to return to Mirror, we would have to have a really good reason to go, better than the reason that we went this year. What we've learned on Star Trek is never say never about anything, but for now, I'm really proud of the story we told in Mirror, and we're going to let people sit with those for a while and maybe we'll be going back again in the future. But for right now, enjoy those episodes from the last year! (Laughs.)

Are you suggesting that the nine-month period in Prime during which Michael and crew were stuck in Mirror Universe won't be revisited?

Harberts: To be honest, Episode 14 ["The War Without, the War Within"] was all about what had happened. With the destruction that was wrought by the Klingons and the Federation during those nine months, we tried to paint the picture of that. I think what's exciting about moving into season two is we've got a fresh new palette. We've put the war behind us and we're excited to move on into some things that Trek fans have been longing for, which is more exploration, more diplomacy, more planets, more away missions. We're focused on serving up some new stuff.

What does this mean for the future of Jason Isaacs, whose Mirror Lorca was killed but the whereabouts of Prime Lorca are still unclear, or Michelle Yeoh, whose Mirror Philippa is still roaming the galaxy?

Berg: If they're out there, the possibilities are endless. Never say never. That's the great thing about this universe: there are so many more different ways to go. I can't confirm or deny anything, but...

Harberts: If we find Prime Lorca, I sort of want to find him making artisan sourdough bread in a bakery in San Francisco. That's how that storyline could start and we'd just build from there. (Laughter.)

Because it seems the Mirror Universe isn't a destination you'll go back to anytime soon, what about Paul Stamets and Hugh Culber's future? Wilson Cruz told us recently that their story isn't over.

Berg: Wilson's correct. We have just begun to tell the love story between Culber and Stamets, so I would just say hold tight.

Harberts: Stamets has got a lot to process that he hasn't had time to process yet, in terms of not being in charge of the spore drive and having lost Culber. We've got to take Stamets on a journey as well and then we'll see. But Culber is a character who is part of this Star Trek world, no doubt.

You're already knee-deep on season two planning. What are you looking to achieve thematically and creatively?

Harberts: Chapter 1 of this novel was war, and right now, we're thinking about Chapter 2. One of the themes we continue kicking around is the conflict between science and spirituality, and that's something that we're very interested, particularly after you finish a war. How do you rebuild yourself? What's required for that? What we're most excited to do is to continue thematic exploration and philosophical exploration and debate, and these characters are perfectly primed to carry storylines like that. That's one thing that we're thinking about. We have a few things up our sleeve, but we'd be lying if we knew everything, because that's the fun of it is as well. You go into it, you see what's working and you see what's interesting, and you build from there.

Berg: The joy is in the journey for us as well in creating it.

Now that an entire season is under your belts, what did you feel worked well creatively? What didn't work?

Berg: We knew this, in theory, going in. but I'm so impressed with our cast. We knew they were talented individually and were fans of them, but, man, getting them all together, it was such a privilege to work with these artists. They are so wonderful as talents and just as wonderful as people. That has been such a thrilling blessing and something you wouldn't even hope to wish for. I've been so happy about that.

for. I've been so happy about that.

Harberts: In terms of things that didn't work, what was so incredible about this season was that we came into it from a place of things weren't exactly working. Not creatively, but that we were up against it.

Bryan [Fuller] had left the show and in order to make the show the best that it could be, we needed to push our airdate. Those were all things that, initially people were looking at as a sign that things weren't working. What's been so miraculous about this season is that it did work. It's kind of like Starfleet getting through the war. I'm really proud of all of our creative partners. So much credit has to go to the visual effects people, to our crew, to our casting agents, to our directors, to our writers. People just brought their best selves to the show at a time when it was touch-and-go for a second and it's been brilliant what people have been able to pull off and the love and care that they've given to the show.

Star Trek: Discovery: Everything We Know About Season 2 So Far

By Keisha Hatchett | Feb 13, 2018 7:45 PM EST

With the Klingon War officially ended and the USS Enterprise slated to finally make an appearance, Star Trek: Discovery wrapped its first season on an exciting note, making the wait for Season 2 all the more agonizing.

But until Season 2 beams to our TVs, we have important questions that need to be answered, such as whether or not Captain Pike's distress call to Discovery means we're finally going to see Spock and what really happened to Prime Lorca (Jason Isaacs) during that Mirror Universe switch. Did he die as it's believed or did he somehow make it out alive?

As we settle in for a long wait until the new season arrives, here's everything we know so far:

Kirk probably won't appear next season

Discovery takes place a decade before the events of Star Trek: The Original Series, leaving the door wide open for characters from the original show to appear. That obviously includes Captain James T. Kirk, the future captain of the USS Enterprise. With Season 2 finally bringing in the famed ship, it looks like we'll start to see some of those familiar faces show up, but, unfortunately, Kirk probably won't be one of them. While the Discovery crew is off exploring deep space, he's stationed close to Earth aboard the USS Republic, making a cameo from him highly unlikely next season.

Engineers log

Spock might not appear either

The reveal that Burnham (Sonequa Martin-Green) is actually Spock's adopted sister has raised a number of questions, namely when the beloved Vulcan would appear and why Burnham's name never came up during Spock's adventures aboard the Enterprise. According to executive producer Alex Kurtzman, you're finally going to get an answer as to why he never mentioned her before, but not necessarily straight from the horse's mouth.

"I've gone on the record with saying you guys are gonna get that answer," Kurtzman told TV Guide. "When I said that, I knew we weren't gonna get that answer [until] Season 2. Which, by the way, doesn't mean you're gonna see Spock in Season 2."

Not everyone will be happy about L'Rell's new position

In the Season 1 finale, L'Rell (Mary Chieffo) helped bring an end to the Federation's war with the Klingons and rose from obscurity to become their new leader. While most will be on board with her new mission to unite and restore honor to the race, some won't be happy about seeing a woman run things.

"We love the idea that a female Klingon ultimately takes power over all these guys," said Kurtzman. "And the truth is, there will be some men who are fine with that and there will be some men who really aren't fine with that."

Those men who aren't on board won't just be sitting in the shadows, they'll be making moves to dethrone her. But if anyone is up for the challenge, it's the woman who infiltrated Starfleet with a sleeper agent.

Burnham and Tyler are a done deal... for now

Burnham hasn't gotten over the fact that Tyler (Shazad Latif) used to be Voq — after all, her biological family was murdered by Klingons — but she did part ways with him on friendly terms in the Season 1 finale. Although they still harbor strong feelings for one another, both will be too preoccupied with pressing issues to try and rekindle things. For Burnham, whose record has been expunged and who currently holds rank as Commander, a distress call from Enterprise will keep her busy aboard Discovery. Meanwhile, Tyler will be focused on figuring out who he is and where he fits in.

Engineers log

"He has to go on his own identity search now. Despite the fact that they can't be together now, I think that flame will always be there," said Kurtzman. Perhaps they'll revisit their romance sometime in the future but right now, they've got more important things to tend to.

L'Rell and Tyler will be allies

L'Rell and Tyler might share a complicated history but they're going to work together as allies in Season 2. Things calmed down for them romantically when L'Rell erased Voq's personality and Tyler realized he was in love with Burnham. With L'Rell stepping up as the new Klingon leader and Tyler embarking on a journey of self-discovery, it doesn't look like romance is in the cards for either of them.

"Right now, it's the politics instead of walking off into the sunset with Tyler," said Mary Chieffo. "I don't think that they're suddenly going to get back together or that there is that romance there but instead, they become allies."

Get ready for even more Tilly.

Over the course of the season we've seen Tilly (Mary Wiseman) push past her insecurities to become a more assertive member of the crew, and now that she has entered the command training program, we're going to witness more of that evolution next season.

"Tilly has an amazing arc this season," Kurtzman explained. "There's gonna be a lot of Tilly finding out things about herself and parts of herself she may not have even known were there."

The spore drive will be different.

The spore drive played an important part as the Federation's secret weapon in the war against the Klingons, but things will be different when we return for Season 2. "The spores will take on a new part of the show. There will be some jumping but it's gonna change this year," Kurtzman teased.

Given that the new technology was never mentioned in TOS, a change in how it's going to be used and the part it plays in the series moving forward is inevitable.

Engineers log

Trek Producers: Discovery Finale And Season Two Hints

Season One of Star Trek: Discovery is complete and now as fans evaluate the finale and speculate on the second season, which will air next year, several Trek producers explain the finale and provide hints as to what to expect in Season Two. Expect spoilers, of course. Appearing on After Trek last night, Alex Kurtzman told fans that “the whole season was reverse-engineered from knowing at the beginning where we wanted to end. For Sonequa’s arc and the bridge crew coming together as a family and knowing the Enterprise was going to show up as the last frame, because obviously we owe the audience some answers to the question of ‘Why has Spock never mentioned his half-sister before.’ The Enterprise promises answers to that question.”

Speaking of the Enterprise, Aaron Harberts explained why the iconic starship was introduced now. “...it seemed like we were gonna be running into the timeline and the time period of The Original Series,” he said. “The more we thought about that...it became more and more apparent that those two ships existed at the same time. And the more that we realized oh, obviously Burnham and Sarek have a relationship, and Sarek has a relationship with Spock, and that ship that he’s on is out there, from very, very early on we knew [we’d bring in the Enterprise] probably because people would be wondering about it, and wanting [us] to. Like, there’s no real...it’s provocative for us too, so let’s just get there, and tell those stories.”

“...The Enterprise will play a part of Season 2 but it will absolutely not overshadow Discovery,” said Kurtzman. “And I think with Enterprise’s arrival in the finale we recognize that the audience has a lot of questions about our synchronicity with the original series, which really means or synchronicity with canon. So the promise of the Enterprise holds the answers to a lot of those questions, including Spock’s relationship with his half-sister who he’s never mentioned.” Does this mean Spock will show up at some point next season? “[W]e realize how incredible Leonard Nimoy and Zachary Quinto’s performances were and what J.J. Abrams and the original series were able to pull off with that character,” said Harberts. “Finding another actor that could even come close to what Leonard Nimoy did with the original portrayal, we’d never want to go down that road.” And finally, back to that green spore that landed on Tilly a few episodes ago in What’s Past is Prologue. “I think that fans should be thinking about what landed on Tilly,” said Harberts.

Log

What a roller coaster we've been on this month. We are all used to crazy weather but who could keep up with whether you needed a coat, jacket, or slicker. Winter boots, regular shoes, or flip flops. All I can tell you is that it can't last much longer. I've noticed over the last few weeks that it's staying lighter longer, and that means daylight savings time is on the horizon.

I am nearing the end of this year's retail year. Yes, the calendar is different for retail. If I can make it through March and achieve my personal sales goal, I will have had a perfect year, and what a year it's been! Achieving 20% of the stores goal for the year is exhausting. I feel like Eddie with USS Horizon stuff and I need to plan a vacation near a beach or take a cruise to CELEBRATE!!!

There were some great times had during February. Spending time with Wiley and Edyn is at the top of my list. Eddie and Wiley were free styling a Star Wars story, and Wiley informed us that Darth Vader is his mom. All this time and we never knew until Wiley disclosed this family secret. After all, isn't Star Trek about possibilities. :-) Edyn missed me so much on the days I had to work, that when she saw me she almost jumped out of Eddie's arms trying to get to me. Edyn and I had a slumber party, two nights in a row.

If you haven't been to the movies to see Black Panther, then you should just stop reading this right now. This was the absolute best Marvel movie yet! Oh, are you still reading?... Well, it's on you now. I don't want to spoil it for you, but the women in that movie were bad mama jamma's! For those of you who haven't seen it yet I'm not going to ruin it, so please go see it. I know people who have already seen it multiple times.

After all, isn't Star Trek about possibilities.

The month of February is almost over and all the plans have been made for the Region 12 Family Reunion. The T-shirts are printed and sitting in my living room ready to be sorted and sold at the reunion. I found it a lot easier this year to plan the event with the help of Chris Tolbert, our Region 12 Coordinator. Having planned last year's summit I found this year a lot easier.

I am getting tired of the cold weather, although it has been a mild winter so far. I am still getting cabin fever because I have not been out of the house very much. The weather does concern me a little for the reunion next weekend. The long range forecast is for decent weather, but you can never tell with how quickly it changes here.

Sad news came this month and on its heels came some good. David lost his job at MOHELA, which he was not surprised about happening. When he filed for unemployment the Callaway County Jail got the paperwork and the HR person called and asked him if he would be interested in coming back to work at the jail. He had applied at the Cole County Jail and the Boone County Jail but had not heard anything from either of them so he decided to go back to Callaway. After he left, because of the pay being low, the corrections officers got a raise, so he was pleasantly surprised at the increase in salary when he went back to work for them.

That is all I have for this month. Have a great spring and I will see you at the reunion.
